Introduction

The novelist Stephen Gilbert was born in Newcastle, County Down in July 1912. His father was William Gilbert, a Belfast seed and tea merchant. His upbringing was thoroughly middle class, and the young Gilbert was sent away to boarding schools in England and Scotland. Although he concealed a dislike of the private school experience, it was here that his budding literary talents were first made manifest. Gilbert, occasionally helped by school friends, produced The Broadcaster, a handwritten and illustrated digest of stories, news and essays which he would post to relatives back home. After finishing his education he worked as a reporter on the Northern Whig between 1931 and 1934, when he joined his father in the family associated business of Samuel McCausland Ltd. Shortly before the outbreak of the Second World War Gilbert joined the 3rd Ulster Searchlight Regiment serving as a gunner. He saw action in the British Expeditionary Force retreat to Dunkirk and in 1940 he was awarded the Military Medal. He was commissioned as an officer in 1941, and was moved around many barracks in England. Soon after, he was released from service to return to the McCausland's agricultural business.

Gilbert married in the mid 1940s and set up home in a farmhouse in Gilnahirk, dividing his time between business and farming. In the 1960s he was also active in the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, acting as secretary to the Northern Ireland branch for two years and helping organize marches and demonstrations in support of the movement. At the time Gilbert felt that 'what was the good of all the writers, all human achievement, if there was going to be no audience'. Whilst Reid used his writing as a retreat into an Edenic dreamscape or imagined past, Gilbert feared that a horrific future would rend apart all art and civilisation. His writing incorporated the shock of the new but did not retreat from it. Themes of horror, and corruption of the natural order, seeped through his work. Although his first novel The Landslide (1943) was a wonder story of a lighter hue, conflict between past and present, and the antagonistic nature of modern humanity were nevertheless strong elements. His other novels were darker fantasies; Monkeyface (1948) told the story of an intelligent ape exploited by its human masters, whilst The Burnaby Experiments (1952) dealt with quasi scientific and occult researches ending in death and possession. Whilst in 1960 Gilbert felt that he 'may be finished as a writer' his most successful piece was yet to come. Ratman's Notebooks (1968) is a horror concerning an emotionally deadened, but embittered, youth who trains rats to attack and kill his enemies - the pied piper thus becomes a sociopath, one who would fit into the world of A Clockwork Orange. The book was twice made into the film Willard, and the book was reissued under the same title. It has also been translated into German, Italian, Dutch and Japanese.

Gilbert also wrote Bombardier (1944), which the playwright John Boyd considered one of the best written novels of the Second World War, and which was based on Gilbert's experiences in the British Expeditionary Force.

The Stephen Gilbert Collection is strong in terms of draft autograph and typescript manuscripts of novels and short stories, proof copies and quires, correspondence, notes, synopses, draft speeches, draft poems, juvenilia, school reports, photographs, scrapbooks, and postcards. The correspondence includes letters written by authors such as a Walter de la Mare, George Buchanan, Forrest Reid and E M Forster.

The mechanics of, and inspiration behind, the act of creative writing is well demonstrated within the collection. The process of writing is often sharply debated in letters, and creative processes are further illuminated in the heavily revised and densely annotated drafts of works, both published and incomplete. Notebooks and transcriptions evidence the research, memory aids, and layered construction inherent in crafting prose, as notes and jottings are added to skeletal plotlines and chapter headings.

The bonds and tensions between Gilbert, and the author Forrest Reid (MS44) are also apparent within his personal papers. The two writers were friends, but being separated by almost four decades, it was a relationship of mentor and protégé, and at times, a difficult friendship.

The collection also holds complete drafts of unpublished novels such as 'The Bloody City' and 'Dear Granny and Sweet Child', also known as 'Granny Carson's Sex Fantasy' or 'Granny Carson's Diary'.

		Gilbert's employment of a pair of maiden aunts: 'For one thing there are scarcely any aunts left - I don't think I know anyone who retains a maiden pair keeping house jointly - so that their introduction has rather the air of a literary device, and shouldn't be emphasised.' EMF concludes with some advice about adolescent diction: 'My little cousin (aged 14) came over the other day, and I watched him with an eye to your diction. The sort of thing he did was to go up to some posts which were connected by chains, shake the chains, discover that some of the links were more worn than others, and then exclaim in tones of intense excitement "I say! Jolly interesting!" No doubt he is particularly foolish, still he confirmed my suspicion that your boys talk and behave too much like little men. Some touches of silliness would inform them!'

24/02/1943 West Hackhurst, Abinger Hammer, Dorking. ALS, 2 pp. (envelope included)

EMF thanks Stephen Gilbert* 'for sending me your Legend [The Landslide, 1943]. Also for your letter, which arrived next day, and by then I had almost finished the book. I think that it is a lovely idea, and that you attacked the technical difficulties involved with skill. One problem, of course, was that of conversation outside of speech; if I had been tackling this I should probably have stylised the animals' talk, and also cut it down in length.' EMF continues by declaring he 'thought the dream better than the drama: that is to say the coming of the animals, their meditations, and the jungle-valley were excellent, but their fight with the men was too slow in developing, and never quite got underway.' EMF playfully states: 'I mentioned the book to my two cats, naturally. They replied that they had read it many years ago, and then fell into a still profounder sleep. Cats are so bad at discussing literature.' EMF asks Gilbert to relay greetings to FR and promises Gilbert he will mention The Landslide in 'my book-talk to India next week.' EMF also enquires after Knox Cunningham* and says that 'I was so surprised to see that he was standing for Parliament, and both surprised and sorry to see that he failed.'

West Hackhurst [Abinger Hammer, Dorking]. ALS, 1 p. (envelope included)

EMF thanks Stephen Gilbert* for a recent 'interesting letter' and responds with an enclosure that Gilbert is to share with FR (enclosure missing, but presumably the text of a broadcast talk on a handful of books). EMF comments on Knox Cunningham's* political fortunes (see MS45/1/18/2): 'I had no idea that Knox was such a politician and agree with you in wishing that he stood upon a different platform.' EMF concludes with playful remarks about the cats (see MS45/1/18/2). EMF's postscript relates to the missing enclosure and shows his sensitivity to contemporary Northern Irish identity politics: 'Please excuse "Irishman" if it is not a right description: I put it in for the sake of focusing the Indian audience on the fact that the book isn't an English one.'

4. 04/04/1947 King's College, Cambridge. ALS, 2 pp. (envelope included)

EMF acknowledges receipt of 'kind letter' from Stephen Gilbert* and the gift of a bowl from FR's estate. EMF declares that the bowl 'now stands on the old family mantelpiece designed seventy years ago by my father [see MS44/1/22/217]. I am much moved and pleased by it, and value it greatly.' EMF writes to Gilbert 'as Forrest Reid's executor' and enquires 'if there should be any question of parting with any of [FR's books] – particularly the Henry James' – would you let me know.' EMF mentions plans regarding 'going to America on the 14th for a couple of months' but would like to see Gilbert in Cambridge or London upon his return. In a postscript EMF mentions the inscription he would like to have engraved on FR's bowl that Gilbert has just sent to him: 'I think that I shall have a further inscription put on the bowl: "From F.R. to E.M.F. 1947," perhaps.'
